NEW COURSES

COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES: Economics

ECON 346 - Latin American Political Economy

3 credits

The purpose of this course is to give students an introduction to the political economy of Latin America. The emphasis is on political economy based on the belief that an adequate understanding of the complex reality of the region cannot be grasped by the application of economic principles and models alone.

Foundational Studies Credit: [FS 2010: Social or Behavioral Sciences]

A-F Grading

Effective term: Fall 2012

COURSE REVISIONS

COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES: Economics

ECON 103 - Economics Perspectives on Environmental Problems

3 credits

This course examines the relationship between economics and environmental problems. Specifically, students learn about interaction between the economy and the environment, as well as how economic analysis can be used to help solve environmental problems. The analysis considers the economic efficiency and equity dimensions, places environmental problems in a historical context, and contrasts the strategies needed to tackle environmental problems at the local versus the global level.
